Long Miles Just Routine To Car Road Test Pilots

NEW YORK.—Washington to St. Louis, 806 miles; Dallas to Denver, 803 miles; New York to Atlanta, 875 miles. These distances represent two or three days of tough, hard driving for the "speediest" of tourists.

But for the road-test drivers, such distances are just a day's work. For example, one group of test drivers recently set a record of better than 800 miles per day for 70 days—and that in the blistering heat along the Mexican border that ranged as high as 110 degrees. Fourteen hours every day, six days a week, at speed averaging 60 miles per hour, six cars were pushed over a 200-mile route. The pace was maintained for more than 50,000 miles—a distance equal to five years' mileage for the average family car.

The terrific driving record was made in road-testing performance of a new motor oil developed by Continental Oil company. In a teardown of the motors at the end of the long run, measurements of moving parts under observation of technicians of the Southwest Research Institute showed no wear of any consequence. In fact, actual measurement with highly sensitive instruments showed the wear averaged less than one one-thousandth of an inch on cylinders and crankshafts. Original factory machining marks were still visible on piston rings.

Another result of the road test was the demonstration economy of operation. Gasoline mileage for the last 5,000 miles was as good as for the first 5,000—actually, there was an average difference for the fleet of only 4/100 of a mile per gallon, or 184 feet.

Music Stores May Replace Druggist Shops

NEW YORK. — The time isn't here just yet, but it may not be too long before you can get your doctor's prescription filled at the music store instead of the drug counter.

Something like a symphony or sonata for sinus, some Debussy for that feeling of debility and a little Rachmaninoff for that restless feeling. And who would overlook Mozart for measles or mumps?

Naturally, music won't set a broken leg or pull a tooth, but some of it will help you digest food better, quicken your breathing, give you more energy and lower your pulse and blood pressure.

The army spent money on the study of the curative and psychological effects of medicine at Walter Reed general hospital in World War II. Out of that venture has come the music research foundation.

Not Entertainment

It is not in any way an entertainment project. Indeed, the idea came as a rebound from an entertainment which drew an agonized scream from a wounded World War I soldier forced to listen to "Over There" . . . Over there where he had suffered terribly.

His scream was heard by Miss Frances Paperte, then star of the Chicago Opera co. Her eventual response was to decide that "all music is not good for all people." In World War II she tested out this belief among hospitalized soldiers, and later founded the Music Research foundation at a New York meeting in the home of Mrs. Benjamin Harrison.

Fritz Kreisler is honorary President. Charlotte Willkie Pihl is Treasurer: directors include Jarmila Novotna of the Metropolitan Opera and Dr. R. C. Williams, U. S. assistant surgeon general; among advisers are Edwin Franko Goldman. Deems Taylor and Fred E. Ahlert President of ASCAP was the first large contributor to the foundation's funds.

Melodies Classified

Musical classifications are "stimulating," "soothing," "happy" and so on. Among the listings prepared by musicologists, are Chopin's Waltz No. 6 in D-flat ("Minute") and the "Peer Gynt" Suite No. 1, by Grieg, "gay;" Chopin's Mazurkas op. 50, "stimulating." Chopin's Prelude No. 7 in A major, and the "Arioso" from Bach's "Aria," "Soothing;" the Dance of The Spirits, from Gluck's "Orfeo And Eurdice," "happy."

Some neuropsychiatric patients, submitted to some curative music, were found to be less tense, to cry less, to "socialize" better, to have an improved emotional tone. New York medical men testify to the utility of music in the treatment of cardiac diseases and the administration of anesthetics.

The doctor defines the patient's need: the musician selects and applies the appropriate number; the approach is primarily medical rather than musical, says Miss Paperte.

"The Music Research foundation is attempting to make a reproducible science of the present haphazard application of music to various uses." The greatest present need, she says, is a "standardized procedure."

New Religious Cults Doing Immense Business in Japan

TOKYO, JAPAN.—Still booming are some 300 religious organizations in Japan as religion, following the war, is becoming even more topsy-turvy.

Buddhism and Shintoism are gradually recovering from their great loss of prestige following the surrender and Christianity is said to be spreading very slowly, despite the occupation.

It would appear that the tight money situation would discourage new cults, but it is very much otherwise. These new sects are doing a thriving business, attending the sick, advising disturbed businessmen and telling fortunes for the lovesick. Meanwhile, long-established churches are having trouble making both ends meet. Their followers either have deserted or have become impoverished.

The religious section in the ministry of education reports that the 42 prewar organizations have been joined by 300 newcomers and that registrations are continuously pouring in from all over the country. The newcomers are credited with a following of 12,000,000 persons.

The new religions are mostly mixtures of Buddhism and Shintoism. Their common characteristics are that the religious doctrines are simple and their founders are medium-like soothsayers. They stress the present world and do not distinguish much between clergy and laymen. They offer solutions for present ills such as sickness, poverty and crop trouble.

Most of the founders of the new religions know something about mesiluie, magic and fortune telling, and use this knowledge effectively.
